Abstract

Human beings need supports from others to keep them survive in the battle. It can give them support and motivation. Otherwise if people cannot get these supports it can make their behavior change to better or worse. The paper analyzes about someone’s behavior change because of being depressed from condition of the war. The writer uses human behavior change by Abraham Maslow to support the writer’s project. The supports are physiological needs, Safety needs, belonging and love needs, esteem needs, self actualization, experience, and loneliness. This study analyzes the change of behavior in a soldier’s life. The suffering of the war can make someone, especially soldier, change his behavior. It can be concluded that someone needs the other’s supports to keep them alive.