ABSTRACT

The goal of this study is to present the conditions of black people in slavery. As the blacks are identified as the inferior and 'Other' creatures by the white people, the study also wants to find out the reason why the blacks are identified in such representation. Library research is used as the research method in this study. The theory that is used in this study is post-colonial criticism particularly Edward Said's Orientalism and the concept of Otherness. It can be concluded that the black people are always identified as the inferior and the 'Other' creatures because they have different physical characteristics, personality, and culture from the white people as the superior in the society.
