Consumer’s Perceived Value and Buying Behavior of Store Brands:
An Empirical Investigation

Wahyu Adhi Nugroho 0800785612
Marketing 2008

Abstract

Objectives Buying processes in grocery shopping involve many factors relating to the final decision of the consumers and those aspects influence Consumer Perceived Value and their buying behavior on deciding which type of product they would buy. Store brands existence as an option in today modern grocery shopping have an important position in retail strategy nowadays and the role have increased during the development of modern grocery stores in Indonesia. Therefore, understanding store brand buyer behavior is an essential topic for marketers and researchers.

Method Demographic Profiling, Mean Value Analysis, Crosstabs Analysis, Reliability Analysis, Factor Analysis – Principal Component Analysis (Varimax Method), Multiple Linear Regression.

Results Dominating, significant aspects revealed, pattern of relationship showed.

Conclusion In overall, the findings shows that consumer’s perceived value contribute positively to their perceptions of store brands and in partial, the aspects of store brand CPVs lead to positive relationships toward buying behavior which eventually will lead to good possibility for them in re-purchasing store brands products in the future.

Keywords Store brand, Consumer Perceived Value (CPV), Buying Behavior